

SOUL LIGHT - Sixteen

CONSECRATING EVERYTHING TO THE DIVINE

Last fortnight I wrote about a Tasmanian paraplegic who inspires thousands with his natural philosophy: "It's what I do with what I've got that counts".

Lizzy from Darwin reminded me of a musician called Gurrumul Yunupingu. He's from Arnhem Land and was born blind. He's just released an album of his own music. (<http://www.myspace.com/gurrumul>). He used to ride his bike everywhere on the island where he grew up - Galiwin'ku/Elcho Island - he was guided by people yelling out directions to him.....

Wow - the courage and determination he must have had, and still has!

But how can you and I with our ultra busy lives get to that same space of sacredness – it seems so much easier for those who are obviously handicapped and therefore less able to take part in the plethora of events and activities we take for granted.

I believe the answer is firstly to recognize that we are all handicapped in one way or another; and to realize that none of us can truly achieve very much by ourselves. Almost everything on this planet is a team effort.

Try thinking of something you do alone – and I'm sure you'll find there's a great many people behind the scenes who, one way or another, make it possible for your seemingly one-person endeavour to happen.

It doesn't matter how we're handicapped – some seem to be much more recognizably so than others – a handicap is still a handicap.
But almost all handicaps s-t-r-e-t-c-h us towards the limit, thereby helping us to grow and develop our natural talents.

Owning that we all have handicaps, as a natural state of being, is Step 1.

Owning that support can help us make most things possible is Step 2.

Sourcing the best possible support is Step 3.

Optimal support comes from Optimal Source.

Optimal Source is the Divine Presence Within.

When we dedicate our lives to this Source by consecrating all our efforts to this immensely loving power we tune in to the Infinite.

We join with the Eternal.

We express the Loving Intent of the Undivided and Un-manifested.

Another Liz (from Perth) says: "I consecrate my practice to God (or whatever is supreme to you). I have also been consecrating other things to God, when I wake up I ask God to use me, and the fruits of my actions in any way. I let go of expectations of how that may turn out, and trust that God will put me in the situations that are most beneficial to the highest good.

When worry or questions about the future arises, I remember to trust and move forward with joy and love knowing that the best possible outcome will occur. And so far, so good!”

This fortnight, when you arise each morning consecrate your life and your every action to the Divine. Start the day in partnership with the Divine – and watch it flower!

Love and Blessings,

Les
